THURSDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 18, 1858. GEN. HAMILTON'S OPINION OF WASH- To be drawn under the Superintendence of Commis-

INGTON. General Wilkinson records a conversation which took place in 1799 with Gen. II milton, in which the latter, speaking of Washington, said:

It was difficult to decide whether he was greater in the fi ld or in the cabinet. He said that the world had very naturally decided in favor of his military capacity, but from the sum of his observations he considered him equally sound as a statesman; for, whatever might have been the jealousies or the insinuations of party, it was no humiliation to him to acknowledge that he had in council fr quently differed in opinion with President Washington, and that events had 1 generally proved that he was wrong and the 1 President right."

The occasion served Hamilton to speak of Certificates of packag's 26 whole tickets $150 00 Washington's magnanimity and disinterestedness in the exercise of his appointing power. He said that in all cases "he nobly divested himself of sympathy or antipathy. and made what he considered the fitness of the agent to the office the ground of his choice." Pickering was not a favorite with Washington, yet he conferred on him the appointment of Postmaster General. Of Hamilion's own nomination as Secretary of the Treasury he said that there had been a misunderstanding between him and the President, and he had no more expectation of office than he had of being a Pope's Nuncio, when he received the invitation to take charge of the National Finances Towards the close of the war be had left Washington's family and retired from headquarters in New Jersev, upon what he considered to be a gross affront put upon his dignity and indepenletter which he had mislaid.

PLANTATION WEDDING.

About half-past 9 o'clock I saw the servants ing mild, with a beautiful meon; at 10 I was invited into the basement of a large edifice, where the ceremony was performed with all due respect and gravity; and, notwithstanding there were near one hundred servants present, the best behaviour prevailed with old and young. The couple were young and fine looking, and joy beamed from their sable countenances. The marriage ceremony having been performed, the company, preceded by their owners and myself, repaired to the laundry, where there was an elegant supper prepared for the occasion, and we all partook of the bountiful luxuries. I never witnessed such good order at any assemblage. The evening was concluded by dancing and amusing themselves in their various little games. All was bappiness and glee, and I am sure if you could have been with me you would have enjoyed the scene; and as I see that Senator Seward was greatly entertained at a Southern corn-shucking, he would have been equally so could be have witnessed this
